(B) Any act may be an attempt notwithstanding the circumstances under which it was performed or the means employed to commit the violation intended if the act itself was such that the commission of the violation was not possible, unless the impossibility would have been clearly evident to a person of normal understanding.

(C) It is a defense to a charge of attempt that the crime was not committed because the accused desisted voluntarily and in good faith and abandoned his or her intention to commit the offense.

(C) A person who intentionally aids, advises, hires, counsels, or conspires with or otherwise procures another to commit a code violation and thereafter abandons his or her purpose and makes a reasonable effort to prevent the commission of the code violation prior to its commission is not liable if the code violation is thereafter committed.

(D) A person liable under this section may be charged with and convicted of the crime although the person who directly committed it has not been convicted of some other degree of the crime or of some other crime based on the same act.
